

FAMILIES IN SOCIETY

2012 Subscription Information

The peer-reviewed journal Families in Society takes its place among social and human services journals as a forum for addressing the interests, activities, and concerns of professionals in direct practice as well as associates in supervision, administration, policy and planning, research, and education. Because of social work's unique concern with the person-in-the-situation, the articles that appear in the journal typically reflect the broad array of issues, conditions, and problems that are pertinent to personal, interpersonal, families, community, and societal problems of living. In addition to these articles, FIS also features literary formats that more readily capture the humanistic qualities of practice. These formats include brief commentaries, reports of experiences, personal essays, and critical discussions.
